

Who Do You Think You Are?

Leadership, Identity, Social justice, and You.

“The process of becoming a leader is very much the same as becoming an integrated human being.”

- Warren Bennis

About the session

“Who do you think you are?” supports current and emerging leaders who are working to see how who they are connects to how they lead. To do this, the session provides participants with ways to see how critical reflection of their identities and of their own beliefs impacts their work, their leadership, and their organization as a whole. This session is less about learning how to lead, but rather supports the courageous process of personal and professional self-discovery and the impact this has on one’s own leadership. An online pre-session discussion forum is used as part of the introductory activities. The session is followed up with online resources for ongoing reflection.

The Results

- Connect who you are with how you lead
- Learn to courageously expand your team’s social inclusion
- Increase the cultural competency of your leadership and your team
- See how power connects to everything you do
- Reinspire your team for the work they do for our world

Who should attend?

The session is designed for individuals and groups whose work focuses on education, health, healing, wellness, public outreach, or other communities of service who are looking for socially just and holistic notions of leadership and group engagement.

Dr William DeJean
INSPIRATION UNLEASHED

For innovative organisations who want to continually inspire and re-inspire themselves for the important work they do for our world, Dr. DeJean's programs will help your team reach optimal potential.

Unlike traditional professional development, Dr. DeJean doesn't just help participants become more effective professionally; he helps them connect to why they do their work so they can reconnect to their greater purpose, support their wellbeing and renew their inspiration.
